

Oluwakemi Oyewole Kimi is women's and human rights activist, an advocate and public speaker dedicated to the advancement of the position of women all around the world. She is natively from Nigeria, and currently residing in Serbia, where she is very active within the Advocacy group of young women supported by NGO Atina, a feminist organization with the aim to support independence, empowerment, and full social inclusion of women and girls. Kimi is actively engaged in building capacities of professionals in Serbia working within civil society organizations and institutions in addressing the issues of migration, position of women in migration, as well as in promoting anti-discrimination standards and policies in order to create a framework for tackling root causes of gender-based violence. She is also actively involved in supporting girls and women refugees and migrants, especially those suffering different forms of violence.

